THE GAZETTE.

THURSDAY EVENING, DEC'R. 12.

THE RED SEA, -A writer in the London News remarks that the Red Sea is rather noted for being hot, but the greatest heat is said to be in August and the early days of September. There are burning deserts on each side of the sea, and the hot air from them is most intense in this month and must come by what-ever wind may chance to blow. "Sleeping on deck becomes the fashion, and every night increases the number of what seems corpses laid out in rows. At last, as we get near the middle of the Red Sea, the ladies find it impossible to exist in the cabins below, and they have their beds brought on deck. Wiping the perspiration from the face and neck is the only possible occupation. If you try to write, great drops gather and come down with a splash on the paper as if from a thunder cloud. Men with bald heads seem always to have a crop of pearls coming up through the skin. All the pores of the body seem like perpetual fountains of water. The sight on the forecastle is very striking at night. There are the crew of Lascars, and the seedy Wallachs, or negroes, who do the stoking. Poor fellows, they come up from their fiery Gehenna gasping, at times fainting, in this climate. The stewards also take refuge on the forecastle, and it is the only place for the second class passengers, and very hand among them there are two Chinese women, a prices, at Malay woman and a group of Ayahs-from Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta. There are two Jews from Singapore, an English groom in charge of a horse, and a few others, a different class, who cannot afford to pay first class fare. All come on forecastle, except a lady or two, who do not like the thick crowding of the sleepers, for the whole place is a mass of human beings. The heat is far too great for fun, singing, or even conversation. Every one lays himself down to rest, and remains there absorbed with his own sensations till sleep gives him complete repose. Wherever there is a spot where a man can put his body the place is soon WADDEY'S, 74 King street.
